Farewell

"Farewell" is a difficult word to comprehend although it may be readily pronounced. For four years, we, the seniors have been looking toward that time when we would be able to say farewell to our books, our teachers, and our school. Now that the time has arrived we become saddened by the thought that we must leave Central.

Our sadness becomes even more depressive when we realize that we shall not be able to come daily to our sympathizing teachers with our bagfulls of troubles; that we shall no longer be guided by their wisdom and understanding. With graduation we leave our second home to carve for ourselves a permanent niche in the great world. We must do this ourselves.

Our teachers have shown us the way to solve our problems. Our principal, Mr. Wiener, has been a faithful, patient friend, always urging us to do our best, always advising us on how to meet the challenge of the world. Would that it could be possible to have Mr. Wiener and our teachers at hand when we begin to find for ourselves. But this cannot be.

Therefore, dear Principal and teachers, we want you to know that we deeply appreciate all you have done for us. We shall endeavor to carve such a niche for ourselves in this world, that you will be proud to admit that we are the products of your skillful training.

And now, "FAREWELL."

FRANCES EHRENKRANZ.

Leaders Wanted

Leaders in school activities are neededein Central. It seems that with every graduation class a certain boy or girl graduates around whom a club has grown. After graduation the club dies, and there is no one to assume the work of reorganizing. This happens term in and term out. Now in our school we have many boys who can become leaders if they so desire. As for the girls, they have proved their capability for leadership on more than one occasion.

Once upon a time in Central we had approximately forty clubs, which included two debating societies, two dramatic organizations, besides a host of athletic and social aggregations. Where are they today? Are we sinking below the social level of our predecessors? We have three times as many students at Central today as we have had before. This means that there ought to be a greater number of clubs and organizations to promote a friendly feeling among students. It seems the opposite, however. The A. M. students are total strangers to the P. M. students. When a PIVOT comes out very few students purchase it. Does this mean that the students are losing their school spirit? If that is the case, it were far better if they left the school and made room for the active school-spirited students. We don't want any sluggard in this school, we haven't any room for them. We need workers.

To lose your school spirit, to lose interest in your activities of the school, means that your mentality is affected. Something is wrong with you and I would advise seeing a specialist. You cannot possibly be in your right health if you cannot become interested in your school paper and your school's activities.

Our Parting Resolution

To every person comes a time when we must part with some important object that has been dear to him, or leave an institution that has become a second home. We, who are graduating from Central, little realize at the present moment the momentous step we are taking. No more shall we find shelter in our great school that has been mother and father to us. No more shall we be able to bring our vexatious problems to sympathetic teachers who seem always to have that peculiar gift of solving them. We must face the world alone.

It is with sincere regret that we are leaving you, O Central, a regret that will grow more great in years to come when we fully realize and appreciate all that you have done for us. You have given us of your best. How shall we use that best? We promise you, O Central, that we shall never besmirch your name. We shall take that which you have given us so generously and use it in such a manner that in the dim years that shall come you will proudly say, "These are my children; I am proud of them."

MARGARET WEINBERG.

Familiar Places

We are going on an imaginary trip. Put on your old thinking-caps and try to imagine yourself one of a group of old, tired and weary alumni. We are gathered around an open fire-place visioning our Alma Mater and its old, old familiar places. The thought of them brings laughter, tears, heartache, and joy to us again in their renewed glory. Let me see, there was the:

Dear old lunch room. With its battered chairs and tables, all of which are emblazed with the emblems of old and benighted Centralites. The odor of rich food, low in price but delicious to palate. Noise and jabbering fill our ears—the freshies and seniors in spirited combat.

The locker rooms, with their jamming and crushing, come next. The lock is stubborn as usual and only a minute to get to assembly. Woe is me! What can surpass a hasty bite of a delicious sandwich between classes—not even the ambrosia of the Gods rival it.

Our mind's eye takes us to the balcony of the auditorium or the "study hall," if you wish. Groups of students, thinly scattered, are working away busily, trying to write beautifully on the arms of the seats. The result is poor but still legible. The study teacher writes hurriedly or sits and muses as his heart or time dictates.

What's that we see in front of us, the library? Let's peek in. Miss Ward and Miss Caprio are busy as usual but they look up with a cheery smile and a grand hello. The books are all in order, ready for hard-working students to pick them up.

Our journey is near an end, but we have to take a glance in at the office. Qualms swell in us as we think of the summons every student receives from Miss Gordon, and if we were poor in our studies Mr. Wiener was waiting to see us! If only we had realized then their great service to us, but we give a loud hurrah now—better late than never.

We will have to say good-bye to good old Central and its old, old, old familiar places. Adieu!

SELINA SMITH.

Remember

Now that spring is here again and winter's frost is past

Memories are so dear again, of days that never last.

Remember, on those bright spring days, we used to walk to school,

Remember, in those hot, hot rays, we longed so for a pool?

Not so today is it, my dear; we don't long for the pool,

We want to say, and do, and hear; most kindly for our school.

Little did we realize then, we'd long for those days back

To mingle with the ones again, on whom we pecked and hecked.

And memories of those high school days may cling to our sensitive minds,

And now we realize what we pay. Oh, for those merry times!

MARION CHAPO.

From Principal to Parent

Dear Parents:

The world is filled with turmoil, trouble and doubts. Your dear ones have been trained in their recognition and taught that success lies not only in achieving what one aims at, but in aiming at what one ought to achieve and ever pressing on to its accomplishment. For great minds have purposes, others have mere wishes. Little minds are tamed and subdued by misfortune, but great minds rise above it.

Success in life, therefore, lies in weaving into our personality the idea that life should have a definite world service goal, the road to which must be fortified by character and vision.

William Wiener

We, the prospective graduates of the Class of June, 1935, being of sound mind (doubted by many) and in full possession of all our faculties (doubted even by us), do hereby declare this to be our last will and testament) until the next time):

To those who believe it better to be late than not to be here at all, we leave Miss Gordon and her penny post-cards. Woe be to him who gives her a dollar and expects ninety-five cents change.

To those without a lunch period we leave the ten minutes after seventh period, and those two minutes between classes.

To all aspiring to learn the art of tripping the light fantastic we leave the lower gym, and the familiar "one, two, three, four, step, close, step" routine.

To those who believe in getting a book for a book report at the last minute, we leave the library, where you will surely find what you are not looking for.

To all who some day have hopes of becoming opera stars, we leave Doc Smith and his Choristers.

To those who wish to become future Greta Garbos and Clark Gables, we leave Miss Boutillier and the Dramatic Club.

To future Rembrandts we leave the Art Department and its inspirations.

To rising young after-dinner speakers, we leave Doc Goldstein and his "chin up . . . "

We leave the space next to where our picture will be, when and if it gets there, in the Rogue's Gallery for the contribution of the present Senior B's.

To those having no place to go during a free period we leave the auditorium, where you'll surely find something to do, even if it is only to stare at the scenery. For those having scheduled study periods, we leave the study hall. For those who do not know where it is we'll tell you—it's the balcony of the auditorium.

We leave the holidays to those who like school so much they cannot get along without at least one a month.

We leave to the girls the friendly and comforting understanding of Mrs. Gormley, who was one of our best and most sincere friends in Central.

To the Class of January, 1936, we leave the Indian head penny we inherited from the Class of January, 1935.

Also to the Class of January, 1936, we leave our good wishes for the best of luck in all their future endeavors. They ought to be very prosperous after we have willed to them all our precious and costly possessions.

Following the precedent set by our forebears, we do hereby leave to the Senior B's, Miss Martin's office. To all students, we leave Mr. Wiener's help and guidance, to cutters, we leave the seat around the flag-pole, and to the Freshies, we leave the battle-scarred furniture, and our lockers and the locks that go with them.

Leaving all the above, but taking with us our pleasant memories of Central, we do hereby appoint the Man in the Moon to be the sole executor of our last will and testament.

In the presence of witnesses, we do place our finger-prints, our ink-blot, and our seal on this document, this Twenty-first day of June, Nineteen Hundred and Thirty-five.

(Signed) CLASS OF JUNE, 1935. Signed and sealed in all solemnity in the presence of Attorney-at-Law MILLIE BAUMAN.

By ESTELLE MEYERS

3115 South Racine Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

April 27, 1945.

Dear Bea:

Well, after ten years I finally landed myself a job as a secretary. My boss is the old grouch, Sydney Stearns, who has at last reached his ambition to be a boss (not to be a grouch). During my first week working here I tired easily, and therefore made no use of the Night Life that our fair city offers. But now that I have learned the tricks of the trade better, with the kind assistance of some of the other girls in the office, among them, three of my old school chums, whom you will remember when I tell you who they are: File clerk, Eleanor Jensen; typist, Harriet White; and Katherine Bilous as one of the bookkeepers.

One night last week I took in some of the high spots of our Metropolis with Morris Jakel as my escort. We arrived at the Riviera, which I understand is managed by Paul Doto. The first person I ran across as we were being led to our seats was Sig Rothschild, who is now one of our well-known Chicago bankers, and he was with his wife, Evelyn Rabinow, whom he said he must go back to sit with, as he had left her there some twenty minutes ago when he went to make a telephone call to Irving Furst, one of his business associates.

After we were shown to our seats, it didn't take long before the waiter, who was William Bulger, came to take our order. When he recognized us as being old chums of his, he gave us the whereabouts of some of our other classmates of ten years ago; Basketball Coach in Chicago College, Maso Ryans; Harry Kaslow, Football Coach in the same college; and Theresa DeClemente, Lillian Lovler, and Olga Plechy are teachers there also. He told us the good news about Lena Gamba. She is teaching Physical Education at Montclair School for Girls.

As the evening progressed the floor show was announced, and the first act was a tango by Helen Bergen and Michael Russo, which was very entertaining. After many other pleasant acts, the finale curtain was raised, and I was astonished to notice that almost the entire company consisted of fellow-Centralites. Among them were: Bernice Nakaneski, Carmela Pizzuti, Theresa Rimassa, Stella Przybylowski, Roselynd Simon, Elizabeth Salowitz, Veronica Mazzullo, Edith Predale, Jean Charnoss, Irene Senk, Theresa Ponzone and Frances Steingard as chorus girls; Dan Tafro and Arthur Silverman as blackfaced comedians, Helen Nolan as the petite toe dancer, and Richard West as a juggler supreme.

After the entertainment was over, we again started dancing, and as I glanced over toward the orchestra I noticed the leader to be Louis Golomb, and the vocalist who was singing one of the popular songs to our dancing, was Alice Yakel; and the orchestra should really have been called the Central Orchestra because it consisted of all Central graduates, namely: Morris Rood, John Poh, Alvina Beyer, William Shuhala, Boris Schwartz, Nestor Papanestor, William Gimmings, Paul Budrick, and August DeSalvo.

When we were about to leave, my escort found himself out of cigarettes and beckoned the cigarette girl to our side; and lo and behold! it was none other than little Dorothy Jones. I was really getting more enjoyment out of seeing these old school chums of mine than the place itself offered, and so when we had filled ourselves sufficiently of its entertainment, we decided to leave, and so after a cheerful ride in a taxicab, driven by Michael Caputi, we arrived at my residence in due course. Morris, after taking me to the door, bid me "Good evening" (but it really was early morning) and departed.

While I was preparing for bed, I put on the radio (softly, of course) with the idea of tuning in to some soft slumber music, when a special announcement was made stating that Edmond Hanson and Peter Gehrke, the country's rising aviators, were successfully reaching their goal, which was to be Calcutta, India. Their flight was being sponsored by Ruderman and Long, aeroplane manufacturers, to prove the speed of their aeroplane.

I arrived at the office the other morning, and found Peter LaPlaca and Ralph Mancinelli waiting to see the boss, and as I knew he would not be in until noontime, I had the assistant manager, Nick Alexander, take care of them. I was in a great hurry to leave the office for luncheon, as I had an engagement with Hope Cohen and Viola

Howe, whom I had contacted last week for old times' sake.

Later on (I had already obtained the boss's permission) to go to the beauty parlor to have Rose Levine, my manicurist, give me a much-needed manicure. (I wanted to look my best when I went to the night club.) They were quite busy at the beauty parlor when I arrived, and I noticed four of the prominent city women waiting for their appointment hours to arrive. You must already have guessed Bertha Rein, Pearl Radler, Ruth Kagan and Esther Imperatrice. Their husbands, Carl Genna, John Flynn, John Wolff, Herman Brummer, respectively, are well-known insurance and real estate men of the city.

I'll have ot close now, but as I see some of the other girls, who work nearby and who used to pal around with us at school, I'll ask them to write to you and inform you as to their interest ing experiences.

I see Selina Smith, Ned Sawyer, Mary O'Connor, Margaret Weinberg, Rose Himmel, Frances Powell, Eleanor Eisenberg, Dorothy Brady, Miriam Greenberg, Mary Kulper, Pauline Drucker and Bessie Kurtzman quite often at the restaurant where I eat, although I do not go out with them in the evenings, and I think that they will be glad to get in touch with you.

Sincerely, Lynne.

I STAMMER

By Dr. LEON MONES

Dorothy shut her eyes tightly and shook her head decisively. It was a way she had when she was terribly in earnest.

"Dr. Colquhoun is just wonderful," she insisted.

"D-d d-doctor C-C-C-Coohoon," I replied, "is a d-(pause to breathe) doctor of c-c-c-chiropractic. I have n-n-no faith in d-d-doctors of c-c-c-chiropractic. Anyhow a doctor of chiropractic could never cure a case of stammering." I rushed off the last sentence without a single spasm, but at the speed of a windswept aero-plane.

Dorothy gave me a smile of scorn and pity.

"He cured Thelma of lisping, and he cured Mrs. Vasser of obesity, and he cured Judge Lanyon of that tired feeling and——"

I surrendered. If the devil himself had offered to cure my affliction by toasting me over burning sulphur, I would have submitted, for I had promised myself never to tell Dorothy of my love until I no langer stammered. And I did want to tell her of it!

Dr. Colquohoun laid me on a leather upholstered operating table. I was stripped to the skin and very, very conscious of it. He did not administer an anaesthetic. I looked up at him and he looked down at me. Then he laid one big, knuckled hand over my left lung and another similar hand over my right. He began to chiropractise on me. He turned me over on my face as easily as though I were a kitten. He prodded with his fists into the small of my back. He soundly cuffed the base of my head and tickled my spine reflectively. Then he paused and leaving his fists lying in the hollow of my back, he began to murmur in abstract meditation.

"Hum—mechanical restoration of subluxated twin boned—ha—abnormal relation and articulation of third vertebrae—hum—obvious displacement of spinal segment—ha—badly constricted nerve bundles—hum—chiropractic readjustment—will relieve pressure—remove nerve constriction—remove vocal obstruction—no more stammering."

Then began an ordeal which I pray never to go through again. He shook me as a terrier shakes a rat. He kneaded me. He wrung me. He changed the position of every one of my ribs. He pounced separately upon each vertebra of my spine and broke it. He knocked my shoulder blades together, until they gave a metallic click. He put his right knee on the back of my neck and rubbed his knuckles over my ears until they were cauliflowered.

Then he suddenly straightened up and looked down upon me with an air of puzzled hesitation and reproach.

"How do you feel?" he asked, kindly. "Better?"

"Th-th-thank y-y-you," I answered, "uh-uh-uh-and you?"

And I continued to stammer!

Dorothy came in, looking as if she had just been born afresh. I put down my pen and resolved to keep cool until she had made some reference to Dr. Colquhoun. Instead, she said not a word, but triumphantly handed me a periodical I had never seen before. It was "Modern Kabalics." She pointed to an advertisement which read as follows:

"Numerology! The universal adjuster! Do you know: What are your frailties? What are their causes? How can you overcome them? How can you perfect yourself? How to get credit with the Bank of the Universe?"

I looked up at Dorothy.

"W-w-well?" I asked, though I knew what was coming.

She shut her eyes tightly, shook her head, and drew in a deep, hopeless breath as if to express the inadequacy of words to tell the wonder of her theme.

"Madame S. M. Suncliffe is just wonderful," she sighed ecstatically.

"Y-y-yes," I said sarcastically, "s-s-so was D-Doctor K-K1Koo-Hoo-Kochoon. B-B-But," (here my rage dissolved my impediment of speech and I spoke with temporary fluency), "I am still applying liniment to my spine! And I think he made me stammer much worse."

"No, you stammer much better," said Dorothy, with sinister sweetness. (She is always sweet and sinister when I am sarcastic.) "But if you refuse my help—"

She turned to go. But I leaped from my chair as though galvanized. I flung my arms and hands far into the air.

"D-D-Doro-th-th-thy," I cried, "I-I'll g-g-go if I stopped short because I remembered my promise to myself and because Dorothy turned around.

Madame S. M. Suncliffe was a stout, genial woman who welcomed me heartily and in bad grammar. She bade me sit down in a very fine, comfortable chair and she sat down in a similar one opposite us. For a few moments, she said nothing but smiled upon me reassuringly. Then she slowly lowered her head, shut her eyes, folded her hands in her lap. Suddenly she began to talk in a low personal whisper.

"My friend, you don't need to stammer. There is nobody alive who cannot perfect themselves. The first directions are simple. Intend your mind in the quarter indicated by your desire. Seek for the light which opens the way to spiritual substance. All this you will, if earnest, do."

"Y-y-yes," I said in awed tones, "and-and-and-Numerology?"

"Your name?" Her eyes were ever downcast.

"J-J-J-Jonathan Perkins."

She raised her eyes a little severely. "Tune yourself!" she ordered. After a pause she continued: "Jonathan—vowels 9 and a. Perkins vowels e-i. Vowels a-o-e-i. Numbers 15-1-5-9. Sum 30. Multiply! Zero is Zero!"

She raised her head. Her eyes opened wide.

Her lower jaw dropped in ecstasy.

"Zero," she cried, "the beginning! The uncreated! The cosmos of the cosmic cycle. You will yet learn how to speak. Your improvement has not vet begun!"

"N-n-n-no," I agreed.

She rose, put her hand on my shoulder and looked deep into my eyes.

"Saturate your mentality through and through with the knowledge that will speak! You will speak! You will speak!"

I made no reply . I was busy saturating my mentality. I could feel my brain working madly and swelling with saturation.

"Can you do so?" she demanded. "Y-y-y-yes," I managed to answer. And I continued to stammer!

She came in on the Monday morning of the new week with a despondent look in her eyes and a little morocco covered book in her hand. She sank into my armchair and looked at me wearily.

"I can't understand it at all," she sighed.
"N-n-n-n m-ore can uh-I." (I really did think she was referring to Numerology, for I had forgotten that Dorothy's enthusiasm never lasted for more than one week.) "Vowels and c-c-c-consonants are uh-all r-r-right in their

I stopped, for she was staring at me with a threat in her eyes.

"I am studying psychoanalysis," she announced.

"G-g-good!" I cried vehemently, but with trembling apprehension.

She handed me the morocco-covered book and I took occasion to move my chair close to hers, so close that I could feel her hair softly brushing my face. I turned to the title page-"What is Psychoanalysis?"

"D-d-does it g-g-give the answer?" I asked, turning my face towards hers. We were so close for one moment that my lips touched her cheeks.

Then she moved her chair six inches away.

"Read!" she ordered.

"Y-y-you r-read," I pleaded. She took the book from my hands, shifted to the farther end of her seat and began.

"All abnormal activities are caused by repressed psychic forces. Psychoanalysis seeks to discover these unconscious psychic forces, the sane reason for all abnormal manifestations. When these psychic forces are brought to the surface and dissipated, all abnormal manifestations disappear.

"Since the psychic forces express themselves in dreams-

Dorothy paused and looked at me suggestively. 'That much is quite clear," she said.

"Q-qu-quite," I agreed, feeling my heart sinking with sickening speed for I sensed what was coming.

"Your stammering is an abnormal manifestation," she declared.

I wagged my head in mournful resignation and started to move my chair closer to hers, but desisted when I remembered my promise to myself and when she moved her chair farther away.

"It is caused by a repressed psychic force,"

she continued.

"Y-y-yes, b-b-but-"

"Which must be brought to the surface and dissipated.'

"Y-y-yes, b-b-but—"

"Dr. Whitechapel is psychoanalyzing Judge Lanyon."

"H-has h-his tired f-f-feeling ret-t-turned?" I asked weakly.

Dr. Whitechapel sat opposite me and I was relating my last dream to him.

"I was i-in a l-l-large r-room which-wh-I was sure-uh-I had s-seen before a-a-and-

"Wait," said Dr. Whitechapel. He handed me a sheet of paper and a pencil, sat down again, and told me to write. I wrote.

"I was in a large room which I was sure I had seen before. I was waiting for somebody at whom I was very angry. I asked the barber for a shave. The barber, who had meanwhile become a soda dispenser, was busy driving the rats from the counter. He glared at me angrily and immediately became a turbaned Turk who was making cigarettes furiously. He was about to hit me with an axe, but in a last desperate attempt I jumped into the river and swam away."

"Your resistance was intense," observed Dr.

Whitechapel after reading my dream.
"I a-a-assure y-y-you," I began to remonstrate. "Ah, my dear sir," he interrupted, "not consciously, but unconsciously. The distortion of your dream shows this. You were so anxious not to reveal your secret psychic forces that you disguised them and confused them . It is your censor working!"

He paused and sank into a brown study. Suddenly he sat bolt upright."

"I am sure I have solved it!" he announced triumphantly. "You are suffering from a brother complex. In your youth you formed an intense hatred for your brother. You attempted to repress your hate and it became imbedded deep in your subconscious. Now your fear of betraying it causes you to stammer. The man for whom you were waiting, the barber, the soda dispenser, the cigarette maker, are all your attempts to conceal your brother's identity-

—" I interrupted. "B-b-but-

"Don't resist," he pleaded. "Don't resist."

"B-b-but-

"The idea is disagreeable, I admit, but remember it is all subconscious. You are in no wise responsible.

I rose and sawed the air wildly."

"B-b-b-but I n-n-never had a b-b-brother."

And I continued to stammer!

It was the day before her birthday and I was buying her a book. I knew she would like one bound in Persian leather and I knew that the contents would make no difference.

The next day she came in all aglow. "It's my birthday," she announced. She has a most peculiar way of announcing instead of

"M-m-my best wishes," I said; "a s-s-small

I gave her the book. It was beautifully bound in Persian leather: I hadn't the faintest idea of what was in it.

She sat down in my armchair and began to turn the pages. I drew my chair close to hers until her hair softly brushed my face. I breathed the rose perfume she always had about her. Nothing reminded me of my promise.

"And I tried so hard to help you," she suddenly said.

"Yes," I said gloomily, "you're a d-dear."

She turned back to her book, and I stealthily moved a little closer to her.

With a jump she put her finger on a line and sat bolt upright.

"Read!" she commanded, excitedly.

"Y-y-you read," I said.

She read all in one gulp of breath.

"Self-centered men are frequently the victims of nervous disorders, such as neurasthenia and chorea, the cause of stammering. A married man whose love is directed to a noble woman is a well-nerved man. Charles Lamb, who remained a bachelor all his life, remained a stammerer; Oliver Goldsmith-

She looked at me with the light of a new enthusiasm in her eyes.

"D-D-Dorothy!" I cried (and I am ready to take an oath that I meant it), "that's my t-ttrouble. It is a r-r-repressed love. D-D-D-Dorothy."

I surrounded her with all my arms.

"For your sake," she breathed against my

Swimming Team

Although the Swimming Team was only in its second year as a sport in Central, it had a banner season. Competing in fifteen meets, the team was victorious in twelve, and placed fourth in the city swimming meet held in the Y. M. H. A.

The outstanding performers of the city meet were: Captain Marcellino Ostinato, William Miller, Richard Miller, and John Nahirney. These four performers were closely followed by Ted Pulton.

The swimmers who earned their emblems are: Captain Ostinato, R. Miller, W. Miller, Collito, Pulton, Nahirney, Tosel, A. Metchnick, W. Metchnick, and Manager DiJocomo.

For the next season, the members of the team will have open practice and will give life-saving lessons for those who wish to earn their Red Cross letters. The practice will also give Coach Bauer a line on new prospects for the coming season.

Basketball

What started out to be a banner season for the basketball team ended up in one of the most disastrous seasons ever experienced by a Central

During its regular season the Varsity won four games and lost eleven and wound up last in the City Basketball League. The Varsity performers to receive letters were: Captain Jack Fein, Manny Elfenbein, Isadore Dubofsky, Irwin Chalmers, John Andrews, Harry Koltman, Mike De-Geranamo, Nat Reinfield, and Manager Bernard Zinman. The other Varsity performers were Dan Pedota, Diz Paellelo, Goerge Pariza, Pat Mirando, Harold Mandel, and Assistant Manager Cliff Bender.

At a meeting on March 27, the Athletic Council, composed of Principal Wiener, Assistant Principal Martin, Coach Sargent, and Faculty Adviser Hegeman voted to discontinue basketball for a few years and giving the following reasons: Lack of interest among the students, not enough practice sessions, and lack of good material.

A Graduation Feeling

Four years have come and gone And here I am, where I started from At the beginning of a new life.

My Long-Sought Love

Many a time I have wanted to travel to the faraway land of Spain,

To seek adventure and love for which I have sought, but in vain. I have wanted to go to that beautiful city that we all know as Rome,

But there too I have stopped to wander, because of my thought of home. How happy I am that I have returned to this state in which I was born,

Because at last I have found my love and I am no longer forlorn.

Eleanor Jensen is one sweet child; If she ever failed, it would drive her wild. Rose Weinstein in shorthand is a wow, But isn't she cute? We'll say! And how! Geraldine Vitale is quiet and short, But we really think that she's a good sport. John Wolffe, a true naturalist, Says: "The pets I very often assist." Mary Stanko has beauty so rare Of which she must certainly take care. Selina Smith is a fine girly, But dearie, don't you wish your hair was curly? Sig Rothschild has weight enough To teach him better than to bluff. Aldona Yuodeska looks quite strong, If you want to blush just string her along. Frances Ehrenkranz, so sweet and demure, Tell us to what do you owe your lure? Irma Caprio rather gabs a bit But we don't give her any credit for it. Helen Sygulski has such a sweet face, Kind words and a smile adds much to her grace. Edward Kacirek is joyous and free And that's what he's always going to be. Rita Tortoretti, a dark-eyed beauty, It's no rare experience to call her "Cutie." Of Margaret Weinberg I can say this, She certainly is a pretty miss.

Henry Helmrick is a sheik;

George Tosel, our football hero, Reminds us of ancient Nero.

But have you heard his tight shoes squeak?
